The Picture Book.

The whig committee have got up a life of a fancy Scott, whom they call General Scott. It is full of pictures like a primer or child's first book of history. It is divided into short chapters with heading in black letter. Beginners can't read long chapters, and they won't read without the "pictures." When they see the "pictures," they will spell out a short chapter. Such is the picture book; and it is designed for places where newspapers and school-masters have not been abroad. The intelligent reader will recognize the names of Chippewa, Queenstown, and Lundy's Lane, and infer that this "Scott" is intended for General Scott, the same man that the whigs have nominated for the office of President.

We can only notice now the last of the chapter highly illustrated. It purports to give an account of the battle of Queenstown. The whig candidate is the man who never lost a battle, but this fancy Scott lost this battle. This might throw some doubts about the identity of the man; but in writing for children, it is not important to be true. We presume it must be meant for Whigland Scott, the whig candidate. He is a queer character any way. He is lost a battle and didn't lose it, at the same time.

But there is an attempt to amuse and entertain the children. It gets into the heroes. Scott and his small force, after performing prodigies of valor, found themselves surrounded by an overwhelming force, without the chance of retreat or the hope of succor. In this emergency what was to be done? Scott mounted a "fallen tree"—so says the "picture" book—in plain view, and was burned to effigy. The whole story shows, not a deficiency in military skill, but an incapacity for civil life, and an inability to get along with men, outside of the camp.

ANOTHER CHANGE.—Among the leading whigs of Baltimore, who have declared for Pierce and King, is Gustavus W. Luman, Esq., a wealthy and distinguished German merchant, and formerly a whig candidate for the legislature.

Mr. Luman has not only declared for Pierce and King, but, we learn, helping in their election by affording "material aid." The Argus says:

Mr. Luman's accession to our ranks is one of the most important events of the campaign, and it is a great triumph for the whig cause. We trust, of a returning sense among mercantile men, of the truth of democratic principles.

LETTER FROM MADISON COUNTY.

[Correspondence of the Louisville Democrat.]
Knoxville, Madison County, Ky., Sept. 15, '52.
Editors: The unflinching courage of Madison men is unanimously united on the great issue. There is no murmuring, no bickering in the ranks; the points of view are clear, and the whigs are concentrated upon the republican nominees, Pierce and King. The whigs are making prodigious efforts to create a military enthusiasm, but all their efforts have failed. Despondency and want of spirit pervade the ranks of the whigs in this county. Many will withhold their support from Scott, while many more will yield him their reluctant support.

As an evidence of a want of enthusiasm among the whigs, I attended a meeting of the whigs of this county, on the 11th inst., where, after several weeks' notice, an announcement that several distinguished whig speakers would be there to address the people, there could not be more than twenty-five persons collected—many of them whigs. Several whigs were present, but the great disappointment to me, and freely declared their expectation that many hundreds would be present. The people were addressed by Major Burton, whig assistant editor, who failed to elicit any applause whatever. The whigs were disappointed, and the whig cause is in a state of despondency, and the whig cause is in a state of despondency, and the whig cause is in a state of despondency.

Also for this modern Leonidas and his 300 Spartans! He is suddenly taken with another happy thought, that never entered the minds of the Greek heroes:

That he who fights and then surrenders,
May still count one, at his defender's side.

This "picture" book does not give the speech announcing the sudden change of purpose, but a friend has supplied it. We don't know where he got it from, or who made it, but we presume it is the same Scott who made the previous speech, and is quite as genuine as the one recorded in these first lessons of whig history.

The reader will see it was made on the ground, and not on the fallen tree; and there is no picture of it in the book. The enemy approaches, and the orator who had just made a Leonidas-like appeal, slips down off the log and shrilly observes: "My soldiers, kindly once said discretion was the better part of valor, and it certainly is a good part of it. I don't believe, on reflection, that I should have said so. It is better, my men, that future heroes should rise on our shield, or should we rise as heroes on the blood already shed? What say you? I prefer the latter. It is true, when I first heard of Hall's surrender, I was 'fired with indignation,' and as the thought then stood, when I stood upon the log, I thought I never would surrender, as Hall had done; but pour out my blood on the ground to the last drop, with arms in hand, that future heroes might rise to avenge my country's wrongs; but 'as the thing now hangs,' my former 'prejudice' against surrender has vanished. I think it more wise that we should be the heroes on the blood already shed, than that others should be heroes on our blood, which will surely be shed if we don't surrender. I therefore now, notwithstanding what I said about Hall, hand over the American colors to the commander of the 'picture' book."

Such is the Scott of the "picture" book. The account has nothing to do with his Col. Scott who fought and was taken prisoner with his forces at Queenstown. The authentic history of those times don't relate that he made an ass of himself by making such a speech, and then surrendering. He and his men did fight bravely, and then surrendered because they were out of ammunition. But this book is a miserable perversion of history, about as true as the stories of Baron Munchausen; calculated to inspire the rest of mankind with contempt of the United States, for the empty gas and pretensions of this caricature of history. Besides, it is a mean attempt to slur over the deeds of others, and rob the living and dead of their laurels to enhance the reputation of a party idol.

We shall have occasion to place some of these chapters along with the official records of the same transactions, from which the mendacious character of this history will be obvious to all.

Tons of these documents are circulated all over the country. Intelligent people, however, can't be imposed upon by the stuff, and we therefore have no apprehensions of its effect; but it will be going to see to what depths means a forlorn
